WELLS-FARGO RATES ARE CUT

California's State Railroad Commission has ordered reductions in Wells-Fargo Express rates that will amount to $750,000 a year. Because of that order the officials of the Company hint that they may quit doing business in the State. The order is the result of an investigation that was begun two years ago. The investigation shows that the Company has an investment of $613,233.65 in California, and is getting an actual profit of $842,097.24—136 per cent. The Commission orders the Company to put into effect a new system of rates, based upon ten-mile block zones, that will yield a net return of 10 per cent, or $61,323 a year.

The State Railroad Commission finds that every year the Company gets a net profit in excess of its investment in the State; that the rate methods are cumbersome, discriminatory and unreasonable, and constitute intolerable exactions upon the public; that the Company is a parasite upon the railroads, and that the express service could be better performed by the railroads themselves or by some other agency; and that the intercorporate relationship between the railroads and the Express Company makes fraud possible upon the railroads and the public.

Recounted their Cash

For several weeks previous to Secretary McAdoo's quiet announcement that he was ready to deposit $50,000,000 in National banks to move the crops, the bankers had grave doubts about their ability to find money enough in the country to take even the Rhode Island cotton crop to the gambling tables in Wall Street. But as soon as Secretary McAdoo said he'd find the money for crop moving, the bankers began to count their cash again, possibly suspecting that their first count was not quite accurate.

California bankers and some in other states now discover that in the first count they made a little error of a few million dollars — but not more than eight or ten million—and on a recount they find they don't need the Government money, but are just as grateful as if they needed all of it. Which means that Secretary McAdoo saw the bluff and called it. The "financiers" are learning that the Secretary is not terrified by a pair of deuces when he has the deal.

An entertainment and dance will be given in Green's Hall, San Bruno, on Saturday evening, August 30, for the benefit of St. Bruno's Catholic Church.

St. Bruno's parishioners are working diligently for the success of this coming event; and a cordial invitation is extended to our many friends on the Peninsula to join us on that evening.

Superior Court

John Billesbech has filed his final account as the executor of the estate of his mother, Mary Billesbach, deceased.

Mary A. Tobin and others have commenced an action against Henry Ward Brown and others to enjoin defendants from using the water of San Pedro Creek. The complaint alleges that Mrs. Tobin and her tenants own nearly 800 acres of land adjoining the stream, and are riparian owners, that Henry Ward Brown and his wife and their tenants own adjoining lands and for some time have by means of dams, pumphead gates and machinery diverted the water of the stream to the great injury of plaintiffs.

Sea Breeze Boulevard

Chas. H. Green, chief of the Manufactures Department, and G. A. Dennison, chief of the Department of Horticulture of the Panama Pacific International Exposition, and party made an extended automobile trip through Santa Cruz and San Mateo counties last week end. Mr. Dennison says he was amazed at the excellency of the boulevard from Santa Cruz to Montara and asks why the north end of San Mateo county cannot have fine roads if the southern part can. He says that such a road extending from Colma to Montara would not only offer the finest automobile boulevard in the world, but by reason of the immense patronage it would attract and bring to the citizens of such a favored locality great prosperity. Mr. Dennison says if the roads in the southern part of the county are due to the efforts of Supervisors Francis and Blackburn they certainly are fulfilling their pledge to the people.—Coast Side Comet.

Welcome to Lane

The Supervisors very properly extended a cordial invitation to Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane to be the honored guest of San Francisco on his Western tour, at some time convenient to himself, which invitation Mr. Lane has graciously accepted. There is no Californian more deservedly popular than "Our Frank," and he will receive a "welcome home" by The People which will warm the cockles of his heart and through all his life remain a pleasant memory.—San Francisco Star.

New Building Contracts.

The American Marble and Mosaic Company agrees to do the marble work on the new St. Matthew's Red Cross Hospital at San Mateo by October 15, for $7,192.

City That Will Not Repent

Climbing the hills of Berkeley
Nightly I watch the West.
There lies new San Francisco:
Sea-maid in purple dressed,
Wearing a dancer's girdle,
All to inflame desire—
Scorning her days of sackcloth,
Scorning her cleansing fire.

See like a burning city
Sets now the red sun's dome!
See the mystic firebrands sparkle
There on each spire and home!
See how the golden gateway
Burns with the day to be—
Torch-bearing fiends of portent
Loom o'er the earth and sea.

Not by the earthquake daunted
Nor by new fears made tame,
Painting her face and laughing,
Plays she a new-found game.
Here on her half-cool cinders
'Frisco abides in mirth,
Planning the wildest splendor
Ever upon the earth.

Here on this crumbling rock-ledge
'Frisco her all will stake,
Blowing her bubble towers,
Swearing they will not break,
Rearing her Fair transcendant,
Singing with piercing art,
Calling to ancient Asia,
Wooing young Europe's heart;
Here where her God has scourged her
Wantoning, singing sweet,
Waiting her mad bad lovers
Here by the judgment-seat.

'Frisco, God's doughty foeman
Scorns and blasphemes him strong.
Tho' he again should smite her,
She would not slack her song;
Nay, she would shriek and rally—
'Frisco would ten times rise.
Not till her last tower crumbles,
Not till her last rose dies,
Not till the coast sinks seaward,
Not till the cold tides beat
Over the high white Shasta,
'Frisco will cry defeat.

God loves this rebel city,
Loves foemen brisk and game,
Tho' just to please the angels
He may send down his flame.
God loves the golden leopard,
Tho' he may spoil her lair.
God smites, yet loves the lion.
God makes the panther fair.
Dance then, wild guests of 'Frisco,
Yellow, bronze, white and red!
Dance by the golden gateway,
Dance, though he smite you dead!

There was a bustle in the Superior Court room last Thursday morning, when court opened after a vacation of one month. There was a lengthy calendar and the room was crowded with attorneys ready to take up their cases. The lawyers will now have a hard grind until next July, when vacation will come again.

For Our Own Hunters

It is said that there is a movement on foot to protect the rabbit, eel and abalone for the use of county residents and taxpayers. If this is carried into effect the Board of Supervisors will have to pass an ordinance to that effect. It is claimed by those who are behind this movement that a number of outsiders come to this county and pay no attention to the game and fish laws, carrying away all that they can kill and capture and it is a known fact that there are a number of foreigners hunting in the Montara section who are slaughtering the rabbits and have no hunting licenses. — Coast Side Comet.

The Average man

The average man is the man of the mill,
The man of the valley or the man of the hill,
The man at the throttle, the man at the plough;
Who brings into being the dreams of the few,
Who works for himself, and for me and for you.
There's not a purpose, a project or plan,
But rests on the strength of the average man.
The growth of a city, the might of a land,
Depends on the fruit of the toil of his hand;
The road or the wall or the mill or the mart,
Call daily to him that he furnish his part;
The pride of the great and the hope of the low,
The toll of the tide as it ebbs to and fro,
The reach of the rails and the countries they span,
Tell what is the trust in the average man.
The man who, perchance, thinks he labors alone,
The man who stands out between hovel and throne,
The man who gives freely his brain and his brawn,
Is the man that the world has been builded upon.
The clang of the hammer, the sweep of the saw,
The flash of the forge—they have strengthened the law,
They have rebuilt the realms that the wars overran,
They have shown us the worth of the average man.
So here's to the average man—to the one
Who has labored unknown on the tasks he has done,
Who has met as they came all the problems of life,
Who has helped us to win in the stress and the strife;
He has bent to his toil, thinking neither of fame
Nor of tribute, nor honor nor prize, nor acclaim—
In the forefront of progress, since progress began—
Here's a health and a half to the average man.

Mr. Hampton of the first addition returned from San Luis Obispo lately.

Harry Leslie has taken a salesmanship with Roth, Blum & Co., the packers.

Mrs. Pixley of this place died a few days ago in the third addition. She was a late arrival from San Jose.

Joe Zaro has a new gasoline plow that will put several horses and men on a vacation. It is the John Deere make.

The poverty-stricken railroad burns thousands of ties along its route. If sold for wood they would help to pay the men higher wages.

The leaning water tank located at the crossing has been wasting water for a long time, but young Valentine has plumbed it all up as good as new.

Hyde Green has just discovered that he never received a turkey sent him by an admiring relative last Christmas—but let him alone, for he's gone home where no one but Dow can find him.

The old Junction House, owned by the Jenevein family for 30 years, has been leased to some San Francisco parties and will be run as a public hotel. The Jeneveins will go on a much needed vacation.

The preachers, landlords and marriage license clerks complain of the lack of matrimonial business. Perhaps the young people are observing the bored expression the married commuters carry on the trains.

It is rumored among the knowing ones that South City is thinking of changing its name to Martin City in honor of its silver-tongued orator, successful booster and all round prime factor in changing the town from a summer cow pasture to the foremost manufacturing city on the peninsula.

Transfer of the license of Mr. Lamb from his old stand to the Barbat property is being actively opposed. Judging by the opposition signatures on the petition the Supervisors will have no trouble deciding the case on its merits. Eleven saloons are in operation here now and that seems quite enough to supply a population of 1500.

Premium on Murder

Senator Bacon, chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, is opposed to recognition of the Huerta government by the United States because such recognition would put a premium on assassination, and would be an incentive to every revolutionary leader to murder the head of his nation with the expectation that the murder would receive the approval of other nations.

Certain "business and commercial interests" want the United States to recognize the Huerta government. If cold-blooded murder is a sufficient passport to the head of a nation, why not to the head of a bank or a department store, a city or a railroad?

Labor Day Picnic

Committees are actively engaged in preparing for the Labor Day picnic to be held at Tanforan Park on Monday, September 1st. Nothing will be left undone to make this affair the best ever. The popularity of Father Jas. A. Cooper, with the assistance of Father Chas. A. Bertola of St. Michael's parish, including Ocean View, Ingleside, Colma and South San Francisco, is a guarantee that the program of festivities will be first class and that everybody who will attend will have a splendid time. These picnics have been attended by thousands of people in previous years and it is expected that many more will attend this year.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE
BIBLE STUDY ON

CROSSING THE RED SEA.

Exodus 14:19-31—Aug. 17.

"Before they call, I will answer."—Isaiah 65:24.

THE Bible story of Israel's miraculous crossing of the Red Sea has long been questioned by agnostics, who also questioned the large number ascribed to Israel—600,000 men, implying a total of 2,000,000 or more. However, the Bible finally is triumphing. Mistranslations and failures properly to interpret figures of speech were the basis of our misunderstandings.

Professor Flinders Petrie calls attention to the fact that the Hebrew word alaf is used in the Scriptures sometimes to mean a thousand and at other times to signify group, families, or tents, very much as we use the word regiment to signify a group of a thousand men, yet often far less in number, especially after a battle. Thus understood, the record, "Judah 74,600," would read, Judah, seventy-four families, or tents, with six hundred men in all; "so they set forward, every one after their families, according to the house of their fathers."—Numbers 2:34.

Crossing the Red Sea.

Thus reckoned, the entire host of Israel might be estimated at about 30,000. Even this was a goodly host to be the descendants of Jacob in but little more than two centuries. That the Israelites were very prolific was evidenced by the Egyptian decree which sought to destroy their children, fearful that eventually they would outnumber the Egyptians.

Necessity of the Miracles.

A miracle is not necessarily a violation of a law of Nature. An unusual occurrence, indicating an interposition of Divine Power in human affairs, would be a miracle, even though it conformed to natural laws. God rarely works miracles except in necessity.

Three roads led out of Egypt in the direction of Palestine; but as a military wall extended from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea to protect against invading armies, these roads had access into Egypt only through strong iron gates.

One of these roads led through the country of the Philistines, to pass through which so large a body of people would have been prohibited. The second road led through a sandy desert, furnishing neither provender nor water. The third road was the one which the Israelites took, leading through the wild mountain regions of Sinai, where they found pasturage.

Several days elapsed before the Israelites reached the Red Sea. Meantime, Pharaoh perceived that the Israelites had wandered about as though undecided which road to take, and concluded that it would be easy to bring them back. The gates of the wall were closed, and several hundred chariots and footmen sent to pursue.

Meantime, the Israelites had passed through two mountain ranges, up against the northern arm of the Red Sea—the Gulf of Suez. Apparently they had gone into a pen, from which there was no escape. Divine providence arranged that a heavy pillar of cloud, or fog, hovered over the Egyptian camp, while there was a bright light in the Israelites' camp. Thus the Egyptians were delayed, and the Israelties moved on until they came to the Sea and beheld that they were hemmed in. Then they cried to the Lord and to Moses, requesting to be permitted to return to Egyptian bondage.

But the word of the Lord through Moses was that soon they would see Jehovah God bring deliverance. Meantime, the north wind began to blow, and gradually the waters receded southward, uncovering a ledge and sand bar, upon which the Israelites crossed to the other side. The befogged Egyptians followed, possibly not realizing that they were on land usually covered by water.

As they progressed into the moist sand, the Egyptian chariot wheels became clogged, their horses went more slowly, then balked, wheels broke, etc., until the Egyptians concluded that, in the figurative language of that time, God had looked upon them with an evil eye out of the cloudy pillar. Possibly there was some manifestation, such as a lightning flash. Meantime, the wind had changed to the south. Before the Egyptians could extricate themselves the water was upon them, and they soon were overwhelmed.

The Egyptians overwhelmed.

There is nothing in this account to stagger faith. United States Government Reports show that the waters of Lake Erie have varied as much as fifteen feet at Toledo, by reason of change of wind, and without any special hurricane. What has staggered our faith in the past was the statement that the Sea constituted a wall on either side of the Israelites. But the word wall in its broadest sense signifies barricade. The United States has the Atlantic as a protective wall on one side and the Pacific on the other.

If the Bible is interpreted with a little common sense, it is entirely reasonable, rich in knowledge and wisdom from on High.

NOVELTY IN BELTS.

A Military Suggestion Has This Nifty Frock.

BECOMING MODEL FOR GIRLISH FIGURE.

Decidedly new is this belt arrangement, which should be particularly becoming to a slender, girlish figure. Alternate straps on skirt and bodice button upward and downward over a sash of bright colored futurist silk, the gown being of neutral colored material.

A Clover Party.

The hostess who has a clover dotted lawn should not let the opportunity slip by to entertain with a "clover party." The invitation should be done in water color, or real pressed leaves may be pasted on. The hostess may receive her guests on the veranda, which has been prettily decorated with large wicker jardinieres filled with quantities of the long stemmed clover blossoms. Over the main porch entrance suspend a large horseshoe made of the pink and white clovers.

Partners for the clover hunt may be found by matching numbers on little brown twig baskets. On the lawn or in the adjoining orchard, wherever the clover patch happens to be, swing seats and cushions should be in evidence. At a given signal from an old time dinner horn the hunt for four leaf clovers should start. Naturally the little baskets are for holding the finds.

During the counting of the good luck emblems lemonade may be served. At 6 o'clock a supper served at small tables on the veranda or under the trees could carry out the clover idea. On each table have quaintly shaped white wicker or pink baskets filled with the long stemmed clovers and plenty of the foliage around them. The supper might consist of cold meats prettily garnished with the clovers, and the salad could be molded to represent a large four leaf clover. The sandwiches could be cut clover shape, and also the little cakes, while the ice cream might be the individual pink blossoms or the green leaves. The prizes given for the lucky clover hunter might be a silver picture frame, with the clover design engraving. The couples with the empty baskets might be rewarded with a corsage bouquet and boutonniere of clovers.

Activities of Women.

New York now has a women's walking club.

France has over 4,150,000 women workers.

Baltimore is the latest city to provide for women police.

New York actresses are going to have a club with a billiard room and a bar.

Despite the vote of the women, Phoenix, Ariz., will continue to be "wet."

Schoolteachers in Cincinnati will soon receive an increase of 10 per cent in their salaries.

Miss Hazel Schmoll has been appointed assistant instructor of biology at Vassar college.

It is estimated that over 200,000 women voted at the recent election for mayor in Los Angeles.

A $100,000 contract has been let for the first buildings of the new Allentown (Pa.) College For Women.

Woman Champions Man.

Miss Beulah Kennard, a member of the board of education of Pittsburgh, proved that women will not always vote for one another when suffrage is granted them by her speech for the superintendent of schools. Women teachers had borne testimony before the board against the superintendent, implying that he had flirted with them. Miss Kennard bravely faced the accusers and declared the whole thing a political plot.

The Conspirators

How They Were Punished With Their Own Weapons

By RYLAND BELL

During the reign of Louis XIII. of France dueling was very prevalent among the nobility, the army—indeed, every one who made any pretense to respectability. One young man in Paris, Gaston Roche, set himself resolutely against the practice and announced that he would neither send nor accept a challenge.

Gaston Roche became engaged to Mlle. Annette Ladis, an orphan with a fortune, and since he, too, was wealthy and of an excellent family there could be no objection to the match. Unfortunately for the lovers, Annette was a minor, and the management of her estate was in the hands of one Alphonse Didier. Didier was still a comparatively young man and had been selected by Annette's father to be her guardian because he intended that the two should marry.

When Gaston began to show evidence of his liking for Annette, Didier, who was guarding her carefully that no one should step in and take her away from him, looked upon him as an enemy. And when the guardian saw that Annette accepted the love offered her he was beside himself with anger.

But Didier realized that to oppose a case of true love by force would be to lose the prize. He preferred to work by secret methods. He first hired one of the best swordsmen in France to pick a quarrel with Gaston and kill him in a duel. But Gaston, who had publicly announced his opposition to settling disputes at the point of the sword, declined to fight.

But this did not lessen the love Annette bore him one whit. She knew nothing of her guardian's connection with the affair. She simply stood by Gaston because she loved him and approved of his stand against dueling, which was killing off all the best young men in France. Indeed, so great was the slaughter that Cardinal Richelieu, the prime minister, had issued an edict against it.

Didier's next move was even more nefarious than his first. He formed a conspiracy to make it appear that Gaston had sent a challenge and have him punished under the cardinal's edict. Annette had a cousin, Antoine Partelow, a worthless fellow who wished that Annette might die without issue since in that event he would inherit her estate. Didier took Partelow into his confidence, and the two agreed as a first step toward possession of the Roche estate to get rid of Gaston. They took in with them a third party, an impoverished nobleman, Count Louis d'Alger. Having possessed themselves of specimens of Gaston's handwriting, they forged a challenge from Gaston to D'Alger.

This preliminary step having been taken, the count publicly insulted Gaston. Since there were many witnesses to the insult all Paris was wondering if Gaston would a second time bring down on himself the imputation of coward. He stood by his principles, but, instead of sending D'Alger a reply to his challenge, ignored it. Not long after the insult had been offered the conspirators contrived to have the forged challenge fall into the hands of Cardinal Richelieu.

Gaston was arrested and taken before the minister. He was shown the proof of his guilt and was thunderstruck. After examining it carefully, though he knew it to be a forgery, he could not detect any point of dissimilarity between the chirography and his own. He simply denied that he had sent it or any other challenge. The punishment named in the cardinal's edict was death, but since the accused denied the charge he was sent to prison to await further proof.

Another charge, one of dishonesty, was brought against Gaston, and Didier told Annette that her lover had been thrown into prison on this account, showing her an order committing him on the charge of peculation. Annette would not believe that her lover was guilty, but the weeks, the months and finally the years went by, and she saw or heard nothing of him. Didier made every effort to win her for himself, but she resolutely declined to marry him or any one else. At last they told her that Gaston was dead, but even this failed to effect the purpose for which it was intended. She came of age and into possession of her fortune. Going to her estate, she lived there in retirement, ignorant of what had become of her lover, but believing Didier's story that he was dead.

Didier, who had been a friend of her father, managed to keep from her the fact that he had been the cause of Gaston Roche's ruin. He was a frequent visitor at her chateau, being always made welcome on her late father's account. She remained faithful to Gaston's memory, refusing Didier's and other offers, but Didier believed, or at least hoped, that by perseverance he would be able at last to dominate her even if he could not make her love him.

At last, in order to escape a world that had become obnoxious to her, she "took the veil."

Cardinal Richelieu died and was succeeded by Cardinal Mazarin. The efforts of the former to eradicate dueling were a failure, and after his death his edict was not enforced. One evening D'Alger was supping in a cafe in Paris when a man entered and swept his eye over the room, his glance finally lighting on the count. Then he walked directly toward him.

The stranger's features were those of a man of about thirty, but he had evidently suffered, and his sufferings had left their trace. His hair was gray and evidently prematurely so. The moment he saw D'Alger his expression changed from habitual sadness to one of intense hate. The count was sitting with his feet extended and when the stranger passed him he deliberately kicked them out of his way. D'Alger rose angrily, but the stranger passed on and took a seat at the other end of the room.

"Alphonse," exclaimed the count to a friend at the table, "go to that fellow and make arrangements for me to kill him tomorrow morning!"

The man addressed went to the stranger, bowed politely and asked for satisfaction for his insult on behalf of Count D'Alger. The person challenged gave his name as Luigi Masseillo and his residence as Rome. This indicated that he was an Italian, but he spoke French without any accent whatever. He agreed to meet the count in a wood beyond where the Arc de Triomphe now stands and chose rapiers for weapons. The hour of the meeting was the next morning at sunrise.

D'Alger had formerly been an excellent swordsman, but his skill had been reduced by dissipation. Nevertheless he was still dreaded. When he began to fight with Masseillo it was supposed that he would soon disable him at least. But those present were astonished at the Italian's skill. He seemed for awhile to be playing with the count as a cat will play with a mouse before eating it, and his enemy saw in his eye the same look that the mouse might see in the eye of the cat. In vain D'Alger sought to get the point of his sword beyond that of his adversary. Every thrust was parried with consummate skill. Finally when his lunges began to lose their force and direction the Italian made a thrust and pierced his enemy in the heart.

When the count's clothing was opened to examine his wound it was found that Masseillo had given the point of his rapier a twist that had left a cut something like an interrogation point.

Scarcely had the Parisians ceased to talk about D'Alger's death and the want of an explanation of the enmity of the man who had killed him when Antoine Partelow, walking past the Palais Royal, looking at an equipage in the street, bumped against a man coming from the opposite direction.

"Pardon, monsieur," said Partelow.

"Pardon? Do you suppose you can knock against a man on the street in that fashion without paying for doing so?" and he slapped Partelow's face.

Partelow stepped back astonished. His assailant drew forth a card, handed it to him and walked on. The card bore the name of Count Rumsdorf of St. Petersburg. Within an hour's time he received a challenge from Antoine Partelow.

At the meeting that took place the next morning the count was recognized as Luigi Masseillo, who had killed D'Alger. The fight was very like the one between the Italian and D'Alger Rumsdorf displayed the same remarkable skill with the rapier and, after defending himself for awhile, pierced his enemy in the same place he had pierced his former enemy—the heart. And what was still more singular, by the same twist he had given his sword before he left an interrogation point on Partelow's chest.

All Paris was by this time talking about this singular stranger who had different names, but left the same mark on the bodies of his enemies and wondering who would be his next victim. They had not long to wait. One morning it was announced that Alphonse Didier had been killed in a duel by a German baron, and the mark left on his body was the same as that left on his other two victims. But Didier was not killed outright, though he died on the field. As he was dying his enemy went to him and, looking him in the eye, said:

"You wish to know who I am? I am Gaston Roche, who would not fight a duel and whom you conspired to ruin. I have left my mark on the bodies of the other conspirators. You are the last. Since you would have it so I have become a duelist. Nevertheless I have fought my last duel, having punished those who made me one."

Cookery Points

Preserving Day Don'ts.

Don't attempt to put up anything by guesswork. Preserves, jellies and pickles all require exact measurements to be perfect. Every fruit needs its own time for cooking. Get a preserving and pickling book and follow the directions to a "t," or, better still, ask the good housekeepers you know for their recipes and write them down word for word.

Don't think that you can put up a large quantity of fruit as easily as you can a small one, however experienced you are. There is a deal of standing to do, and interest flags when the body is weary. Much good fruit is spoiled on preserving and canning day because it was put up when the housekeeper had reached the listless and exhausted stage.

Don't think that you can be economical with sugar when preserves and jellies are in hand, for you will find this a great mistake. In the first place, fruit stinted of sweetness seldom keeps, and, in the second place, it has no taste. Jelly will not "jell" if the fruit juice and sugar are not measured exactly according to directions. But sometimes the jellying process is delayed for some reason or other even when there is enough sugar. In this event put the jelly in the sunshine for a little while, where the action of the bright light will produce the desired change.

Don't think that you can be entirely successful in all your canning, preserving and pickling if you have only makeshift tools. Proper implements save time, and they are more likely to bring success. The utensils needed for a good batch of work are a preserving kettle, well cleaned and dried jars, several jelly bags (half of cheesecloth and half of flannel), two or more square pieces of flannel, a long handled spoon, a colander, a puree sieve, two or three large bowls, a ladle, a pair of scales, a quart, pint and gill measure and perhaps a canner.

Don't think if your family is small that you must use quart jars. As all of the fruit cannot be eaten up at once, it is a deal more sensible to put it into pint jars. Jelly and jam tumblers do not need to match, and for sealing these up paraffin candles can be melted down and the hot wax poured over the fruit. But this is only a makeshift device for the amateur practicing with a little fruit, for the paraffin sold by the pound is better for the purpose. Wash the candles off if they are to be used and strain the melted wax. Have about a quarter of an inch of the wax at the top of the fruit and seal up the "practice" tumblers with letter paper put on with white of egg.

Don't think that because you haven't got a regulation boiler for your fruit jars your nice things will spoil in the making. Any wash boiler can be used, but the water must never come up to the top of the jars, and they must stand on something while the boiling is going on or they will break. Spread the bottom of the wash boiler with hay or straw or cover it with four or five layers of newspaper; then put over the covering some weight or other to keep it down. The jars should be at least two inches under water, and if bottles are boiled the water should reach one inch below the cork. After the jars are in the wash boiler pour the water in—cold—and place the boiler on the stove, where it will come to a slow boil.

Don't forget that the time for boiling depends entirely upon the fruit, and if you have lost the recipes pin this memorandum up in the kitchen: Peaches should boil from twenty to thirty minutes; ripe pears (Bartlett), about thirty-five minutes; plums, fifteen minutes; apricots, twenty minutes; pineapples, forty-five minutes; berries of all sorts, five minutes; cherries, five or ten minutes; quinces, about twenty-five minutes.

Don't forget that when the time for boiling is up the jars should be removed from the water and set upside down to cool; also see that they are set on a dry table and not on a wet one, for the least drop of cold water will crack the jars.

Don't forget to fill up the slack jars with hot sirup as soon as they are taken from the bath; then close them at once, turning each one upside down when the top is tight.

Don't forget when canning vegetables that the same filling up of slack jars is made with boiling water, but that the jar must be at once sealed and boiled again for five or ten minutes.

Don't forget when the jars are cold to examine each one and to see if it is air tight; then, if all is well, wipe the jars off with a clean wet cloth and set them at once in a cold, dry place.

Don't forget that the good grocery stores pay a fancy price for first class homemade products of any sort. The labels must be written out by hand on neatly cut slips of letter paper. This gives the home look, and if the real home taste is inside the jar the grocer will take the batch, however small or big it is.

Fried Summer Squash.

Take three or four small and tender summer squashes—crooknecks are the best. Cut in slices about half an inch thick, take out the seeds and boil them half an hour or until tender in slightly salted water. When done fry them in butter to a delicate brown.

Frederic C. Penfield Named For Austria-Hungary.

Frederic Courtland Penfield, whom President Wilson has named as ambassador to Austria-Hungary and who was diplomatic agent and consul general to Egypt, with the rank of minister resident, from 1893 to 1897, was born in Connecticut on April 23, 1855. He was graduated from Russell's Military school at New Haven and took up special studies in Germany. He served on the Hartford Courant, leaving that paper in 1885 to become vice consul at London. Following his retirement from the London post he wrote extensively on world politics and international affairs.

On Grover Cleveland's second election Mr. Penfield served as an expert adviser on the requisites of an improved foreign service. In 1893 he was minister to Argentina and before going to that post spent two years in Egypt as a colleague of Lord Cromer.

Mr. Penfield is a man of unusual attainments, holds a number of degrees and foreign decorations and is an author of note. He is a member of many New York clubs, including the New York Yacht club.

Mr Penfield has been twice married. His second wife was Mrs. Anne Weightman Walker of Philadelphia, daughter of the late William Weightman, whose fortune is estimated at from $70,000,000 to $80,000,000. The entire fortune descended to the daughter.

James Hazen Hyde In a New Role.

Tiring of a life of elegant leisure and with money to burn, James Hazen Hyde, formerly of New York and now of the Bois de Boulogne, Paris, has taken to the lecture platform in the gay French capital. In that center of culture lecture audiences are critical, and Mr. Hyde has studied the styles of the greatest orators of the present day in France and combines them as far as possible in delivery of his addresses.

Mr. Hyde does not lecture on any question which does not bear upon

JAMES HAZEN HYDE.

France and the United States. He looks upon French civilization as a continuation of that of ancient Rome. And his object is to turn as much as possible of it in the direction of America.

To open wider the way for this he lectures on the role of France in the development of the United States.

Mr. Hyde dresses especially for the lecture platform. He wears a coat so well fitting that it suggests corsets, and he shows a chest development which would make Planchon of the grand opera green with envy in his most palmy days.

He Wrote West Virginia's State Song.

Frederick Neil Innes, winner of the $1,000 prize recently offered by West Virginia for a state song, is director of the band which bears his name. He was born in England in 1858, and received his education at Rugby. The new song had its first public presentation at the semi-centennial celebration at Wheeling, June 20.

CLEAR THE WAY.

The crest and crowning of all good,
Life's final star, is brotherhood,
For it will bring again to earth
Her long lost poses and mirth;
Will send new light on every face,
A kingly power upon the race,
And till it comes we men are slaves
And travel downward to the dust of graves.

Come, clear the way, then; clear the way.
Blind creeds and kings have had their day.
Our hope is in the aftermath—
Our hope is in heroic men
Star led to build the world again.
To this event the ages ran.
Make way for brotherhood—make way for man!
—Edwin Markham.

ARBITRATION CONTRACTS.

Value of Each Agreement Is Great to Employer and Employee.

When a contract is made between a labor union and an employer by the terms of which each party agrees that there shall be no strikes or lockouts take place in that factory during the stated term, but that all disputes that cannot be mutually adjusted shall be referred to a board of disinterested arbitrators to decide, the general public has come to regard such an event as one to be highly commended, because it tends to allow production and distribution to go on unchecked, says the Shoemakers' Journal.

The public believes that employers and employees ought to find some way of adjusting their disputes without stopping the wheels of industry and commerce and without discommoding the public.

Under the strike method when an employer is presented with a demand for more pay, with a strike as an alternative, there is an element of coercion about it that nettles him, and he is apt to reason that, as the employees are looking for trouble anyway, it might as well be now, and the strike occurs. Similarly, if the employer introduces any new method of work or any new condition of employment, employees may think he is looking for trouble, and growing resentment leads to a strike or lockout. It is the mental irritation that makes both sides nervous and scrappy that leads to many of the labor conflicts.

Just as the strike method of dealing with industrial disputes breeds strikes and lockouts, so does the arbitration contract breed conciliation and mutual adjustment. The real fruit of the agreement of both sides to arbitrate—the value of arbitration contracts that the public does not know—is that the mental condition of both parties, with occasional exceptions, of course, is such that it leads them to say to themselves and to each other: "As long as we have agreed to settle this any way, why bother with arbitration? Let's adjust it."

And so it is adjusted nine times out of ten. In the experience of this union in the last ten years the adjustments of wages or conditions in factories working under arbitration contracts by mutual agreement have outnumbered the arbitration cases by about twenty to one. In our experience the arbitration contract has proved valuable not for the cases of arbitration it has produced, but for the twenty times as many mutual settlements it has made possible without arbitration being actually invoked. It is on the same theory that a policeman is valuable not for the arrests he makes, but for the obedience to law that his presence inspires.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR PACT.

Continental Agreement as to Employment of Girls and Boys.

The Swiss federal council has decided on Sept. 15 next as the date for the meeting of a conference of delegates from the governments of the principal industrial countries in Europe, by invitation of the Swiss government, to consider the drafting of an international agreement to prohibit the employment of girls and boys below specified ages and to fix a maximum ten hour day for youthful workers within certain other ages.

An international governmental commission is to meet on Sept. 11 to arrange a basis for the periodical exchange between the governments of statistics in regard to the application of protective labor laws.

The British Labor Party.

A report of the British Labor party, to be presented to the international congress at Copenhagen, shows that the total strength of the party last year was 1,481,368. The total consisted of 1,445,708 members of 161 trade unions, 30,982 members of Socialist societies, 4,000 members of the Women's Labor league and 678 co-operators. In 1908 the strength was 1,152,786. During 1909 the Miners' federation, with a membership of 550,000, was affiliated. The strength in 1900 was only 375,931.

Last Tribute to Union Members.

The Musicians' union of San Francisco has amended its laws as to funeral detail. The members will hereafter be chosen in alphabetical order to attend funerals of deceased members and will be paid $3 for the service. A failure to attend or furnish a substitute will entail a penalty not to exceed $5.

Women Run Strikers' Cars.

Three women operated street cars as strike breakers in Phoenix, Ariz., recently. They stuck to their jobs for some time in spite of threatening street crowds, but the manipulation of controllers and brakes finally proved to be too much for them, and they abandoned their gongs after a struggle of three hours.

CONSISTENCY IS A JEWEL.

Why Union Men Should Always Prefer Goods Bearing Label.

If there is one feature of the labor movement which has been so persistently called to the attention of the rank and file and which has received less consideration than the union label we do not know which one it is, says the Garment Worker.

Every international union whose members are employed upon commodities to which a union label is attached has spent thousands of dollars in an effort to educate the workers as to the value of this insignia of humane and fair working conditions, yet we find that, while there is a slight increase in the sale of union made goods, it is all out of proportion to the great increase of membership in trade unions.

Why this situation should obtain we are unable to say, but that this is a stubborn fact cannot be successfully denied by the most ardent advocate of the union label and what it stands for.

How can any trade unionist maintain a consistent position who in his union meetings advocates fewer hours and increased wages for himself and fellows and at the same time be an employer of nonunion labor?

To our mind this sort of union man is a constant menace to the trade union movement, because he embodies the personification of selfishness, as he cares nothing for the welfare of the thousands of workers in other trades and is content to have the money which his trade union secures for him perpetuate convict, child and sweatshop labor by continually purchasing the goods which are produced under these conditions.

It is possible that the system of advertising the union label by personal appeals to the rank and file is wrong, but we do not believe so, and until we can arouse a feeling in the men and women whom we have every right to appeal to for their patronage, that every time they purchase anything that does not bear the union label, when it can be procured, they are virtually taking the same position they would did they accept employment in time of a strike, and in what light would they then appear to their fellows!

True, the union label is not the last word in the emancipation of the workers, but it cannot be denied that it is a potent weapon for good, and we urge upon the thoughtless men and women who have been careless in this direction to remember the promise they made when they joined a labor union to discriminate in favor of union made goods. In other words, be consistent and practice what you preach.

MANY STRIKES IN ENGLAND.

The Year 1913 Will Probably Set a New High Record.

There are signs that 1913 will create a new strike record for England, but it will be slightly different in character from that of last year.

In 1912 there were more days lost on account of strikes than had been the case in any previous year, the total approaching very nearly the 40,000,000 line.

The record for 1913 is likely to be in the number of individual strikes. So far 400 separate strikes and lockouts have been reported, or double the number of last year, which was in itself a record.

The number of work people affected by these disputes was, however, not very much out of the ordinary, and the number of days lost has been exceeded four times in the last ten years.

It is a remarkable fact that the excess of time lost through trade disputes coincides more or less with years of booming trade.

First Minimum Wage Scale.

The very first minimum wage scale for female clerks was established some ten years ago by the Fort Worth (Tex.) Retail Clerks' union. After a struggle lasting for several weeks $5 was established as the minimum.

TRADE UNION NOTES.

Canadian letter carriers will receive an increase in wages.

Workmen's compensation, minimum wage, initiative, referendum and recall laws were passed by the last Minnesota legislature.

The new financial system adopted a year ago by the Bricklayers' International union has greatly strengthened its financial condition.

British members of the Federation of Transport Workers have adopted a resolution urging all members to refuse to handle munitions of war.

Under the new laws in New York state women employed in mercantile establishments in second class cities can only work fifty-four hours a week.

The co-operative industrial societies of the United Kingdom show nearly $350,000,000 of business during the year of 1911. The membership is 3,000,000.

In Austria no industrial concern employing more than ten workers is allowed to work women or girls between the hours of 8 in the evening and 5 in the morning.

Ten thousand longshoremen and dredgemen employed along the great lakes hereafter will receive as much pay for eight hours' work as they have been getting for twelve hours.

By a vote of six to three the United States supreme court has refused to limit the benefits of the federal liability law to trainmen actually operating trains in interstate commerce.

INDEX AND RECORD PROGRESSIVENESS

For many months the rapidly increasing business of the San Mateo Index has indicated the necessity of a more suitable and spacious place of business than the rear room of the Jennings building—the home of the paper for the past three years. Several locations were investigated and found to be inadequate to the demands of so progressive a printing establishment and it was thought that it might be necessary to erect a building.

Finally, however, Mr. Jennings was prevailed upon to remove the partitions separating the offices recently occupied by the Water Co., Geo. A. Kertell and the Board of Trade, so that the Index might occupy the entire floor.

Since last week these partitions have been removed and part of the office equipment placed in its new position, but ten days longer will be required to make the entire change, including the installation of considerable new material and facilities for increasing the efficiency of the office in the production of first-class printing.

Another change of equal importance is the securing of the services of Mr. Al. C. Sweetser, who with this issue assumes the duties of associate editor and business manager. Mr. Sweetser has had many years experience in the newspaper business, and the good people of San Mateo will find him to be a genial and progressive citizen.

Both the San Mateo Index and its companion publication, the Daly City Record, will soon show marks of Improvement and be fully in keeping with the fact that they are produced in the most perfectly equipped printing concern in San Mateo county—an office worth seeing and a welcome will be extended to all.

GIRLS get so in practice fooling men they sometimes fool themselves.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox advises people to marry early and work hard. The latter clause is entirely superfluous.

SYSTEMATIC promptness lies at the foundation of success. Do exactly what you have agreed to do and do it promptly and well.

WE heard a man this week boasting of how he "got the best of a friend." Poor fool, don't you know anyone can beat a friend—once.

THERE is a vast difference between earning money, making money and getting money. The first may be called honesty, the second speculation and the third robbery.

OUR San Bruno correspondent this week chronicles a rumor that changing the name of South San Francisco to Martin City is contemplated. We always did think something like that would be more appropriate.

ALL the beauty and light of life come through devotion to one's duty, glory in one's work, plainness of speech, dress and manner, evenness of temper, unflagging industry, unfailing integrity, thorough honesty and a never-ceasing sense of honor under all circumstances and conditions.

THE San Mateo Leader exhibited a commendible spirit in its defense of the State Highway Commission in answer to the dastardly attack of the San Francisco Chronicle, but poor taste was shown by injecting the same cheap politics that was so apparent in the Chronicle's tirade. Every "knock" of the Chronicle is a "boost" and for that reason this paper just considered the source.

ORGANIZED LABOR of Fresno have decided not to celebrate Labor day this year, owing to the fact that a month later the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the California State Federation of Labor covenes in Fresno, and they propose to bend their entire energies toward entertaining the 400 delegates that will assemble for a week's visit to the Raisin City at that time.—Fresno Labor News.

☞ The honest way to discontinue a subscription to a newspaper is to first pay the small amount you owe. Thus you will retain the respect of the editor and guard your own peace of mind. Supervisor Casey is progressing nicely with work on the new School street road from Colma to the ocean. Enrico Biggio, who has the contract for the concrete bridge, is preparing for the work and will soon have it under way. This new outlet to the beach will be of incalculable value to Daly City and Colma and Jim Casey deserves the greatest of praise for fathering the enterprise.

Dr. F. G. de Stone, the Eminent Scientist Will Lecture at Knowles Hall

On Saturday, August 16, 1913, at 8:15 p. m. Dr. F. G. de Stone, the eminent scientist, will give a demonstration of his remarkable discoveries in Mind Science, taking for his subject in a 30 minute talk "Suggestion and Hypnotism." The Doctor has accomplished most remarkable results in the development of the vocal powers of his wife, who a year ago could not sing at all, and who now under his direction, in a trance condition, sings in a register far exceeding any known singer of the present day. Miss M. Ruth MacDonald, the well known composer and Inspirational pianist, will assist in the program in vocal and instrumental music. An unusual treat. Don't miss it. Knowles Hall, 400 Mission Road. Used Bad Language

P. Lacaze, proprietor of the Burlingame French Laundry, was on trial before Justice Elfving Tuesday on a charge proferred by Mrs. Morser of using insulting language to her. It appears that the laundryman claimed the lady owed him money for washing, and Mrs. Morser countered with the charge that Lacaze lost some of her clothes sent to the wash and refused to pay until they were returned.

Lacaze was persistent and dunned the lady on the street. She was equally firm in her refusal. Lacaze lost his temper and used language that would not look well in print. Hence the suit. The result was the conviction of the defendant and a fine of $10, which was promptly paid. Lacaze was represented by Attorney McCurdy and Mrs. Morser was her own attorney.

DALY CITY DADS

The first business of importance was consideration of the purchase of a new water wagon at a cost of $420, payable in installments of $50 a month. Mr. Freyer questioned the legality, contending that no contract could be entered into for an amount exceeding $100 without advertising for bids. Attorney Morris advised the board that the transaction was legal, so the deal was confirmed.

Freyer reported no perceptible improvement in sanitary conditions; that the the bulkhead at foot of Los Angeles avenue was in dangerous condition owing to building of new S. P. fence; that a vote of thanks should be extended to John D. Daly for rock given to the city.

Freyer and Green moved that the rules be suspended and that Mr. Stevens, attorney for the dairymen, be given the floor, but the motion was lost.

Green suggested that a tank be installed at the lower end of Mission, so that the street may be sprinkled occasionally.

The Socialist Local petitioned for the trustees to endeavor to get the 5-cent car limit extended to Orange avenue. Biebel and Landini appointed to do the trick.

H. H. Smith instructed to return old water cart to the owner.

Marshal, Clerk and Treasurer's reports read and filed. Treasurer's report showed balance of $1700.63.

The ordinance calling an election on August 30 for the purpose of turning over the public utilities of Daly City to the Railroad Commission, passed by unanimous vote. The election officers designated were as follows:

Precinct 1, Pappas Hall—John Britt, inspector; John Borsky, judge; Mrs. S. E. Saunders and Mrs. Mary Behre, clerks.

Precinct 2, Smack's Hall—Fritz Hansen, inspector; May Collins, judge; Mary O'Brien and O. G. Severing, clerks.

Precinct 3, Crocker Tract Hall—Henry Hailer, Jr., inspector; Thos. Moran, judge; Alma Wooley and Janet Turner, clerks.

Green reported that permit had been given by road committee to haul the sand to Park avenue and that the party refused to remove it and moved that teams be employed to take it away. Mr. Freyer, as one of the road committee, stated that he knew nothing about the permit.

The new ordinances were passed their first reading, viz: for fire escapes on buildings over two stories high; preventing careless driving, against obstructions or sidewalks.

City Attorney Morris stated that the cow ordinance suits had been continued for the purpose of getting the trustees' suggestions regarding an extension of time for removals. Attorney Stevens stated that his clients, the dairymen, were willing to plead guilty, but wanted at least six months time to move. He pleaded as a matter of charity and exhibited the strongest humulity.

Mr. Freyer recited the facts, viz: that the ordinance was passed in November 1911, when 120 days were granted to remove, this time expired March 30, 1912, at the close of the term of the old board. In addition to the 120 days, the dairyman have had over 16 months, so that he considered the city had been very lenient and moved to recommend that 15 days be granted by the recorder. No second.

Green moved that In view of the dairymen's plaintive plea for mercy that they should be given 60 days and placed under bonds for $200 each, in addition to the plea of guilty, to remove at the time specified. No second.

Finally no action was taken and the matter was left to Judge Johnson for decision Thursday.

By motion of Freyer and Green it was decided to have two clean up days on September 6 and 7.

The matter of water main from Spring Valley Co. for relief of one hundred Hillcrest families, the attorney stated that it would have to come under the head of a franchise, that would require week's publication of a notice in a weekly newspaper. The motion was made then to grant a temporary permit, when the attorney again repeated what he said before; that he was earnestly willing to give the people the relief they asked, but a temporary permit might be for 20 years. At any rate the Spring Valley Co. could claim a franchise right, and if the board passed the resolution they must do so without his sanction. Laid over until Friday evening.

Green called attention to the fact that the city is paying $1.25 a week for rental on a typewriter. By motion the clerk was authorized to purchase a new typewriter at a cost of $97.50.

Under Rule 9 R. R. Castle spoke regarding the proposed Hillcrest pipes.

F. A. Hansen suggested that when trees are removed they should be taken by the roots.

T. Sheehan spoke of the extra travel on Irvington street, that it needs sprinkling.

It was suggested that the Crocker Estate Co. might purchase $4,000 worth of the water bonds, providing the city will buy their plant for $21,000, and the necessity of selling a portion of the bonds for the construction of Mission street pipers was urged. Mr. Freyer called attention to the pledge that was given to the people before the water bond election that neither of the old water plants would be bought. That the people were then and are now up in arms against the water companies, and doubted if the bonds would have carried without such assurance. He also wanted information why the printing of bonds had not been done, as none could be negotiated until they are printed.

The action of the trustees of postponing the sidewalk work on Hillcrest Drive under the 1911 Improvement Act, at a previous meeting, until the State Highway is completed, was rescinded and the Hillcrest Drive people will get their improvement, thanks to the Record.

By motion it was decided in the the future the Water and Lights Committee consist of the entire board.

NEW THEATRE

Modern Vaudeville Play House for Daly City to Cost $10,000

The new theatre that is being erected at the corner of Mission street and Temple avenue will open for business on Thursday, September 11, and will be a first class vaudeville and motion picture house, equal to Pantages or the Empress, so that the people of Daly City can point with pride to the new improvement.

No name has as yet been selected and the management is offering a prize of $10 in gold for the most appropriate name suggested.

The theatre is being constructed of the very best material; is surmounted with the best corrugated iron roof and particular precautions are being taken to safeguard against fire, including six spacious exits so that an audience of six or seven hundred people can be safely gotten out in less than five minutes. Furthermore, a complete fire apparatus is being installed, including an inch and a half hose on the inside of the theatre near the entrance and there is also another hose back of the stage, so that danger of a panic caused by a fire is practically impossible. The one and a half inch hose, which is the only one that large in Daly City, is connected directly with the water main.

There will be a ladies' and children's parlor and also a gentlemen's lavatory, together with every modern improvement, including first class opera chairs, and besides four boxes are to be installed, two of which will be ready on the opening night.

The management has complete confidence in the future of Daly City or they would not make so large an investment at this time. "Here," they say, "will be the next great business center south of 29th and Mission, and we want to be on the ground with a a first class vaudeville play house, equal to anything in San Francisco." *

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

John Paul Jones Will Invade Europe.

American athletic sharps are deeply interested in the announced intention of John Paul Jones, the sensational Cornell university runner, to go abroad late in the summer to compete against the British cinder path stars.

Jones is apparently dissatisfied with his share of American laurels and seeks more worlds to conquer. He will be greatly missed in forthcoming events on this side of the big witness.

Jones made a new world's record for the mile at Cambridge last May, covering the distance in 4 minutes 14 2-5 seconds.

Smith Praises Foreign Golfers.

Four American professional golfers who went to England to compete in the British open championship returned home and told of their experiences on the foreign links.

In the party were Alec Smith, former national and metropolitan open champion; John J. McDermott, the present national title holder; Tom McNamara, the metropolitan open champion; Michael J. Brady of Wollaston and Alec Campbell of Brookline, Mass.

"Our treatment could not have been better," said Smith, "and we were all delighted with France. We are glad to have met the Frenchmen and Englishmen on their own stamping grounds and hope to give them all they are looking for when they come here next month for our championship.

"Yes, Vardon, Ray and Reid are coming from England, while Arnaud Massy and Louis Tellier of France will come along. We surely will have to go some to keep the title in America, but I guess we're equal to it.

"I have no regrets nor excuses," continued Smith. "We had a glorious time and were treated like princes. We were beaten at La Boulie by golfers who knew the ground, and they simply putted like fiends. The criticism sent to America of the links there was true to the extent that the man who pulls and slices can get away with it, which more than offset our own method of keeping everlastingly on the flag."

Stahl to Quit Baseball.

Garland (Jake) Stahl has been relieved of the management of the world's champion Boston Red Sox. Catcher Bill Carrigan has been exalted to the post.

An air of mystery pervades the whole transaction. Jake says that he is through as an active figure of the national pastime. He will retain his stock in the Boston champions, the value of which is variously estimated at from $10,000 to $25,000.

Hofman Sues For $3,000.

Arthur Hofman, formerly a member of the Chicago National league club, has filed suit against the Chicago club for $3,000. He asks this sum as damages due him by reason of a termination of his contract.

Hofman was traded to the Pittsburgh Nationals and subsequently was sent to the Chattanooga Southern league club.

Cole's No Hit Game.

Leonard ("King") Cole, former star in the Chicago National ranks and now with the Columbus association team, recently pitched a no hit game at Milwaukee, defeating the locals by 3 to 1.

Points for Mothers

Child's Summer Diet Should Be Simple.

In regard to summer meals simplicity should govern their preparation. Avoid all highly seasoned dishes. Prepare light meals with cooked or uncooked cereals, plenty of vegetables prepared simply, fruits not too ripe or green, with very little meat indeed, says Dr. Maude Kent in Modern Priscilla Magazine. A bit of carefully boiled or baked beef, mutton or fowl once a day is a large meat allowance for a child who is old enough for such foods. The fresh, green vegetables are most wholesome.

Cut down on potatoes in hot weather and always serve them baked or mashed without rich gravy. Soups or broths (all fat removed), with rice and finely cut or chopped vegetables, are especially nourishing. Clam bouillon, too, that comes prepared is a very good addition to the child's menu. An egg once a day, soft boiled or dropped on toast or rice, is a satisfying meal.

All the simple dishes, like bread and cracker puddings, soft custard, blancmange and the gelatin desserts, are digestible and nourishing. Children easily learn good food habits, and the things they best love fortunately answer the summer requirements for a diet that is cooling, palatable and satisfying.

Milk is, of course, the summer food staple, but mothers need to remember that it is a hearty food in itself and not a beverage to be used as water to satisfy thirst and added to a full meal. For the incessant demand for "a drink" give pure cool water that is not ice cold and give it between meals.

Teach the children that a few sips slowly taken will quench thirst better than a whole glass of water hastily swallowed. With cereals, blancmange and bread, milk makes a nourishing meal. One of the best lunches on a hot day is a beaten egg in a glass of cooled cocoa. The egg lemonade and orangeade are nourishing food drinks also.

When the King of Rome Cried.

Many mothers might take a lesson to heart from the following incident narrated by one of Napoleon's biographers:

His little son, the famous king of Rome—L'Aiglon, whom Maude Adams portrayed as a young boy a few years ago—was hardly more than a baby. He was in charge of a lady of high birth, who acted as his governess. In addition to gentle birth this woman possessed a true love and thorough sympathy for children. She understood the little king of Rome as nobody else did, and in return for her affection and kindness he grew very fond of her.

One day he began to cry, pettishly and rebelliously, and would not stop. The lady ordered the windows closed, the curtains drawn and the candles lighted.

The child looked on in wonder.

"What are you doing?" he finally asked.

"I am closing the windows so that the people of France will not know that their little prince cries," said the lady.

The little prince ran to her impulsively. "A thousand pardons, madame," he said in the formal words in which he had been taught. And he forthwith stopped crying.

His governess understood that an appeal to a child's sense of honor will have more effect than all the scolding or reasoning in the world. Most mothers, although their children are not princes, could at least suggest to their children that the neighbors in want of subjects would hear the crying. An appeal of this sort seldom fails, especially when drawn curtains and lights in the middle of the day have attracted the child's attention and taken his thoughts away from the cause of his sorrow.

What Every Mother Should Know.

Every mother should early learn the appearance of a healthy throat. She can then easily recognize inflammation, enlarged tonsils and other unhealthy conditions. She should also accustom her child to throat examination. Even a baby will soon learn that there is nothing to dread in having a teaspoon or other form of tongue depressor used. As so many of children's serious troubles start in the throat, it is better to be overcautious and to summon a doctor at once. The appearance of a rash is another danger signal which should not be allowed to go unheeded. A child on whom a rash has broken out should at once be quarantined, especially if there are other children in the family.

If a child shows any bad effects from a fall a doctor should be consulted and the child thoroughly examined. The fact that no bones are broken is no proof that other injury has not been sustained. This is one of the cases where an ounce of prevention is worth many pounds of cure.

Plate Baby Can't Push Off the Table.

At last some one has brought out a plate that baby can't push off the table and break into a dozen pieces. This new plate resembles a flat, deep bowl and is attractively decorated with nursery rimes and Kate Greenaway pictures. Around the lower bottom is fastened a strong wire support that catches under the table edge, the edge of a high chair or tray and that keeps the plate firm.

For the Children

Little Son of Captain Scott, the Lost Explorer.

MASTER PETER SCOTT.

Very likely you all remember father or mother a little while ago telling you about Captain Scott and the brave men who went with him to find the south pole.

It does not much matter to you what this south pole really is, except that every one agrees that to find it is about one of the hardest things on earth to do.

Captain Scott and his party did find the pole after months of suffering and danger, but they found it only to lose their lives out in this frozen region.

It was a splendid, fine thing to do what these Englishmen did, even if they found out after reaching the pole that another man, Amundsen, had got there ahead of them. The world nevertheless always will be proud of this little company of Englishmen who failed to arrive first at the pole.

The sweet little boy whose picture you see is Peter, Captain Scott's baby son, who waved goodby to his father when he started for the pole two years ago. Peter missed his father so much that every now and then he would say to his mother: "Isn't it time daddy came home again? He promised he'd come back to us soon."

If you care to know more about Captain Scott and this little boy there is a book written especially for you children which tells the whole story of the expedition.

Conundrums.

Why do Russian soldiers have steel and the French brass buttons on their coats? To fasten them with.

How can you swallow a door? Bolt it.

Why is a watch a difficult thing to steal? Because it must be taken off its guard.

Why is an air played by an orchestra like Italian robbers? Because it is a band ditty.

An Industrious Child.

Anne Elizabeth Emily Green
Loved to polish and scrub and clean.
Early and late and brisk as a bee,
Good little girl, she'd work for three.

She polished the knocker right off the door,
She scrubbed herself through the pantry floor,
She brushed the dog till she made him jump
And washed the cat at the back yard pump.

She rubbed the color quite off the face
Of her waxen dolly, whose name was Grace,
And combed her hair in so stern a way
It all came off in a heap one day.

Out in the garden among the flowers
Anne Elizabeth raked for hours,
Cried when some of them would not grow,
"Well, it's a great deal neater so!"

The fairies watched, and they said, "It's clear
Talent like this is wasted here."
So they whisked her up in the air one night
And set her to polish the old moon bright.

And there she toils, for Anne has found
The moon is terribly large and round,
While the man is cross if she isn't quick
In trimming his queer old lantern wick.

And then she is told, when the wind is high,
To take out a broom and to sweep the sky
And the twinkling stars wouldn't shine so bright
If Anne did not give them a rub each night.

None of her friends have ever seen
Anne Elizabeth Emily Green,
But an old astronomer one clear day
Saw her scrubbing the Milky Way.

PAID BOTH HIS DEBTS

The Chance Came During the Reign of Terror.

A party of noblemen were amusing themselves shooting near Dijon, France. After a shot by the Marquis of Tours, aimed at something seen indistinctly in a thicket, a human cry was heard. The party rushed to the point whence it proceeded and found a young girl of sixteen lying on the ground bleeding from a bullet wound in her side. From the opposite direction a man came hurrying, and when he saw what had happened he took the girl up in his arms and, shaking his fist at the huntsmen, cursed them for what had been done.

"Is it thus that you overrun our peaceful fields, you nobles who never toil, but feed on what we common people produce? And, not content with wasting the fruits of our toil, you ruthlessly shoot our children without taking the trouble to discover that they are not birds. Wait, messieurs: The day will come when we will crush you under our heels!"

"It was an accident," replied the marquis. "Here; take this," throwing him a golden louis. "Were it not for your threats I would make it ten times as much. Come, messieurs. Let us go on."

The party proceeded on their way, but had not gone a dozen yards before the coin was sent spinning past the ear of the marquis. One gentleman, a young fellow of twenty, remained behind. Kneeling beside the girl, he stanched the blood with his cambric handkerchief, then said to her father:

"Let us carry her to her home. I am a student in the Paris School of Medicine. I will see what I can do for her."

Henri Duriac did not leave the home of Antoine Garnier until the daughter, Lizette, was out of danger. Indeed, he alone saved her life. Three weeks had elapsed when the young doctor said to Garnier:

"The crisis has passed. Any physician can now attend to the dressing of the wound."

"Doctor," replied the father, "why have you taken this trouble? You are a noble."

"Yes, but I am a man."

"You have given me the life of my daughter. Some day I may repay you."

"I do not need money, and I trust that I may never need your assistance," replied the young surgeon.

Eighteen years later came the reign of terror. Henri Duriac, now Count Duriac, was about to be arrested, but succeeded in escaping across the border. Count Duriac had been married, and his wife and her daughter, Louise, were about to follow him when they received a warning not to attempt to do so.

Mme. Duriac, though beloved by all the province in which she lived, was at last arrested and with her daughter taken to the conciergerie in Paris.

One day they were led out to be tried. For what? For being of noble birth. A man sat behind a rude table, ready to act as judge and jury to send prisoners to the guillotine. Mme. Duriac and Louise sat waiting their turn, watching the people who were pronounced "traitors to France" marched away to die. A portly man, who showed by his dress and bearing that he was an aristocrat, stood before this self constituted tribunal.

"Your name?" asked the judge.

"I am the Marquis of Tours."

The judge flushed.

"Do you remember, marquis, hunting for birds and shooting a maiden?"

The marquis paled, but said nothing.

"Traitor to France!" said the judge. "Take him away!"

In half an hour the marquis' head rolled into the basket.

"Next!"

"These," said a gendarme, "are the Countess Duriac and her daughter."

The judge started. "Madame," he said, "you are accused of being a traitor to France. What is your defense?"

"I make no defense. Defense would be useless."

"H'm!" said the judge. "Take these women to the little jail in Rue St. Jacques and bring them here tomorrow for sentence. The executioner is too busy today to attend to them."

That night a muffled figure appeared before the little jail in Rue St. Jacques and presented an order for Mme. and Louise Duriac. Throwing a mantle over each to conceal her features and especially her attire of a gentlewoman, he led them through some of the narrow streets in Paris. Stopping suddenly beside a carriage and opening the door, he bade them enter. Not doubting for a moment that they were going to the guillotine, they obeyed, and their conductor mounted the box beside the coachman, and they were driven beyond the barrier. Stopping now and again for fresh horses, they traveled until at last they heard the splashing of waves. Then they were put into a boat.

"Take this letter to Count Duriac, madame," said their conductor, "and tell him that the man who gave it to you may soon be executed as a traitor to France."

The prisoners were rowed to an English vessel standing off the coast and in an hour were sailing for England. Once on board Mme. Duriac opened the letter to her husband and read:

Count—Eighteen years ago a fiend shot my daughter, and a noble saved her for me. I have sent the fiend to the guillotine, and I send the noble two lives for the one he gave me.

A Birthday Story

The Scene Is Laid In the War Between the States

By Captain F. A. MITCHEL

"Grandma," said Alice, "this is my birthday. I am, as you know, sixteen today. Mamma says that you were just sixteen the day the battle of something or other—I don't remember what—was fought. I wish you would tell me something about the great war, something that you were interested in, for my birthday."

"You'll have to ask grandpa to do that, for, while he was a soldier boy of '61, I never heard a shot fired. But I can tell you an incident with which I was remotely connected which may interest you. It is true that I was sixteen years old the day the battle of Fredericksburg was fought, and there are reasons why the name of the battle should be more deeply impressed on my memory than on yours.

"THERE HE IS," SAID THE STORY TELLER.

"Of course we of the north devoured the accounts of the battles of the war, and I, in reading an account of Fredericksburg, was interested in a soldier in the ranks of one of the Union regiments who, when all the officers were killed off, took command and led the remnant of the men clear up to the southern line. There he fell and was carried away by his comrades. We were much more apt to be impressed by a single act of heroism like this than by a great victory of a whole army, and I thought a great deal about this soldier who had stepped out from the ranks to lead a handful of his comrades, who had been spared from the awful shower of bullets and shells and cannon balls which had a clean sweep over that unbroken incline from the river to the ridge. I pictured him tall and slender, with a resolute face, coal black eyes and wavy black hair. I suppose I pictured him dark because we usually associate strength and will power with dark complexioned persons and mildness with blonds.

"Two or three months after the battle of Fredericksburg I was visiting some friends in Pennsylvania. I was told that there were several soldiers on the place who had been wounded in the battle, on leave of absence, recovering from their wounds. I was anxious to see one of them, just as any one is interested in seeing a curiosity. One of them was a colonel, and I think the others were soldiers in the ranks.

"One day I went to return a call a lady had made on me as a stranger, for those were the days of hospitality, and on being shown into a room a man, or rather, a boy, for he didn't look to be more than seventeen or eighteen years old, was reading a book. He didn't rise as I entered, though he made something of an effort to do so, but he greeted me with a pleasant smile, and since the hostess was quite awhile coming down we fell to talking.

"'I fancy,' I said, 'that you are an invalid.'

"'I'm not exactly an invalid; I'm a convalescent,' he said. 'But I think a couple of weeks more will let me up.'

"'This is not a good season for one to be sick,' was my next remark. 'Last spring about this time I was obliged to be away from school two months on account of illness, and it threw me back in my classes. Are you in school?'

"'Well, no; I haven't been to school for more than a year. You see, these times are so exciting that boys can't very well be kept at school. Some of them go for the nearest recruiting station, pass for more than the required age, eighteen, and enlist. But I didn't have any trouble on that score. I was nineteen.'

"'You don't mean that you are a soldier?'

"'Yes, he replied, smiling at my surprise. 'I'm older than I look. I'm twenty.'

"'Oh, you're one of those I have heard of who were wounded in the battle of Fredericksburg?'

"'Well, yes. I was in that fight.'

"'My goodness gracious! You don't mean that the army is composed of such'—

"I stopped short, realizing that what I was saying was by no means complimentary.

"'Such measly material as I? No. I admit that I'm not a fair specimen. I scraped through as to height when I enlisted, measuring barely five feet four. I weighed 110 pounds, though,' he added proudly, 'though I don't believe I'd pull up a hundred now.'

"'You mean ninety.'

"I thought what a shame it was to send such a stripling out to be shot down like a dog, and that, too, by human beings. The sight of him gave me a repugnance to war I've never recovered from, and I am happy to say that every year war is rendered more difficult among civilized nations and consequently is less likely to occur.

"'Were you very badly wounded?' I asked.

"'Badly enough to be laid up three months thus far. The surgeon says that I've got another month of it, but I'm not going to stand it. I'm going back next week.'

"'Not going to stand it! I should think you wouldn't stand to go back at all.'

"'I wish you would tell me,' I said later, 'how you felt when you were marching up against those Confederates and the hailstorm of bullets.'

"'At first I felt kind o' sick at my stomach. That's the way a good many of us felt, I reckon, if we tell the truth. When I saw men shot down about me it made me mad. The rest of the time I was mad; that's about all of it. Soldiers become like dogs or any other brute when they are in fighting trim.'

"'That's an ignoble view to take of it.'

"'It's the true view all the same.'

"It occurred to me to ask him if he knew the young soldier I had read about who had taken command of what was left of his regiment and was leading the men forward when he was shot down. He said there was nothing in that, for when the officers were all killed somebody must take command and it was likely to be the maddest man left. There were many such cases.

"'Why weren't they reported?' I asked. 'I read only of this one.'

"'Oh, reports of battles are manufactured,' he replied. 'It's dog eat dog in a fight, and that's all there is about it.'

"At this point the lady on whom I called came down to receive me.

"'Permit me to introduce my nephew, Colonel Stevens,' she said.

"I looked about for Colonel Stevens, but saw no such person. My eyes finally rested on the stripling I had been talking to, and I noticed an amused look on his face. What did it mean? That boy a colonel? It could not be possible.

"'Charlie doesn't look much like a colonel in his present condition,' said the hostess, 'but I fancy he looked more military when at Fredericksburg he took command of some seventy or eighty men, all that were left of 600 who were struggling on up that slope in face of a murderous fire.'

"They say that a drowning person sees his whole life pictured before him. Every word I had spoken to the man came up to appall me, though it is a wonder that I ever got beyond mistaking him for a schoolboy. I sank into a chair in collapse. My hostess, seeing my confusion, looked amused, but the subject of my mistakes, now that the truth was coming out, began to look annoyed. Finally when I had regained my tongue I asked:

"'Are you the man I read about who'—

"He made no reply, but his aunt replied for him. 'Yes,' she said, 'he is the Stevens whose conspicuous act of bravery was reported at the time.'

"'While the others didn't happen to get into the newspapers,' put in the hero.

"'The regiment is being reorganized,' added the aunt, 'and Charlie is to be its commander. He has already been promoted to be colonel for gallant and meritorius services at the battle of Fredericksburg.'

"There are persons who love to hear their praise sounded if not merited, but a few are annoyed even at listening to words of encomium that are richly deserved. Charlie resumed his reading, which had been interrupted by my entrance. To him it had been perfectly natural when he saw the men deprived of their leaders to spring to the front and shout, 'Come on!' He could see nothing remarkable in this and could not be convinced that it was remarkable or that he should be heralded in the newspapers and promoted above his fellows, any one of whom if given a little time had been as likely as himself to do what he did. This, at any rate, was his view of the matter, and I have never been able to change his opinion."

"Why, grandma, who was this man?" asked the girl who had listened to the story.

"Oh," exclaimed the old lady, "I forgot!"

"Forgot what?"

At the moment a diminutive old gentleman with snow white hair entered the room.

"There he is!" said the story teller.

"Well, what is it?" asked the old man, discovering that he was an object of interest.

"This is Alice's sixteenth birthday," said the old lady, "and she remembered that I was sixteen the day the battle of Fredericksburg was fought. She called for a war story, and I told her one about you."

The old man frowned. "Don't tell that again," he said. "War was made for wild animals. It's unnecessary, and from now on the disputes formerly settled by murder will be tried in international courts—at least, that's the proper place for them. I hope there'll be no more legitimate killing."

HENRY JR. SAYS

This Is Your Town And It Is What You Make It

By HOLLAND.

WHAT makes a town? People and business. You are one of the people. What you buy helps make the business. The more you buy the better the business; the more business the better the town.

You want the town to grow and improve, don't you? Then you should help it to grow by increasing its business as much as you can. Every time you send elsewhere for goods you give your town a blow. Enough of these blows will ultimately kill the town.

The mail order houses do nothing for your town except try to kill it. Are you helping them? You are if you send your money to them for goods that you could buy at home. If you are more interested in the growth of Chicago or New York than you are in the prosperity of your own town, your own neighbors, then continue to send to mail order houses for goods. If you want your own town to thrive

SPEND YOUR MONEY
WHERE YOU MAKE IT.
